

#82

Spines are chopsticks, forced between eyelids.

Bodies are missiles, bound to be left in cold storage, propped up, surrounded by trapdoors more ominous than mysterious.

There are wire spiders in these walls, mushrooms growing out of Ouija boards and questions about job security.
Lack of answers is dampness, a fog that settles
over the safest life available.